Apple's $193 Billion Secret

Revealed: Tim Cook's Closely-Guarded Plan to KILL Another Giant Industry

These 3 Stocks — NOT Apple — Stand Poised to Help You Double or Triple Your Money as this $193 Billion-a-Year Industry Gets Clobbered

Dear Investor,

Apple CEO Tim Cook is hiding something.

In fact, he's hiding a secret so big...it will revolutionize a $193-billion-a-year industry...

And it could also help investors who know Apple's HUGE secret double — or even triple — their money in the months ahead.

Right now — in this report — you're going to discover Tim Cook's closely-guarded secret — and potentially unlock the key to your family's financial future.

Let me show you...

When Cook took the stage at Apple's huge event on September 9 in California...most of the attention went to the products and innovations that Cook launched.

The new iPhone 6s...the iPad Air...even the Apple Pencil — they all got plenty of attention from the media and from Apple's loyal (and sometimes fanatical) customers.

But none of those products are going to make you rich.

Instead...Apple's secret plan to slaughter the $193-billion-a-year Cable TV industry can help you double or triple your money.

You see...while Cook was all smiles on stage — even revealing the latest version of the Apple TV, complete with a new remote and other impressive features...

Off-stage, he's anything but friendly when it comes to the future of Cable TV.

In fact, the man is on a secret mission...he's hell-bent on destroying this industry — and change the way you watch TV forever.

What Apple is planning will be the most significant change in your daily life since the rise of the Internet.

And here's the thing:

Apple has done this before. Several times, actually.

You see, over the past two decades, Apple has either killed — or permanently changed — a number of industries that were once thought to be indestructible.

Each time this has happened, the general public was shocked by the radical transformation as once-mighty industries fell by the wayside.

But forward-thinking investors saw the shift coming...and took home life-altering profits.

These new "Apple Millionaires" were able to purchase vacation homes...pay for their children's college tuition...take luxurious trips...and in some cases even retire years early.

All because they cashed in on a huge opportunity that Apple presented them.

Only...they didn't invest in shares of Apple.

Let me show you...

It happened when... Apple's iPod and iTunes store revolutionized the music industry beginning in 2003, slashing music industry revenues in half in the decade that followed.

Global revenue of music industry ($billions)

No less an authority than rock star Jon Bon Jovi said, “Steve Jobs is personally responsible for killing the music business.”

A $12 billion-a-year industry was quickly chopped in half. Stores like Tower Records, Sam Goody’s and Virgin Records began to disappear from the American landscape.

But some companies — including Apple suppliers like Broadcom, who provided microchips for the early iPods — saw their revenues and share prices soar.

Broadcom shares were trading for $6.85 in September 2002, but — thanks in part to increased revenue from sales of Apple’s iPod, shares quickly soared to $29.16 by June 2004...and then all the way to $42.67 by January 2006.

A $5,000 investment in Broadcom back in the fall of 2002 would have turned into more than $31,150 by January 2006...for a gain of 523%!

It happened again when... the introduction of Apple’s iPhone changed the entire landscape of the mobile phone industry beginning in June 2007. Companies like Research in Motion — maker of the Blackberry — and Nokia were devastated.

Research in Motion shares reached a high of $147.55 in June 2008. Less than nine months later, those same shares were trading for just $35.25 in March 2009.

June 2008 - March 2009

The same thing happened to Nokia — a mobile phone company that at one time had better than 50% market share. In November 2007 Nokia's share price stood at $30.02. By March 2009, Nokia's share price had plummeted to just $6.56.

Finland's Prime Minister, Alexander Stubb, went so far as to claim, "One could say that the iPhone killed Nokia"...and in the process destroyed Finland's economy.

But some companies — like Cirrus Logic, a critical supplier of chips and audio components to Apple's iPhone — quickly soared. When the iPhone first went on sale on June 29, 2007, shares were trading for just $8.00.

By July 2010 — following the wildly successful launch of the iPhone — Cirrus' shares had soared to $20 — for a gain of more than 150%.

It happened again when... Apple's iPad cut the knees out from under the Personal Computer industry. Before the April 2010 launch of the iPad, companies like Hewlett-Packard were alive and well.

Hewlett-Packard's share price in April 2010 was $53.90... but by November 2012 those shares had fallen all the way to just $12.44.

But while those companies were getting clobbered, others — like Analog Devices, Inc. — were soaring sharply higher.

Analog Devices, Inc. is a key supplier of chips for the iPad — and its share price has skyrocketed from $16.67 in February 2009 all the way to $58.46 in 2015...for a gain of 251%!

A modest $5,000 investment in this company back in 2009 — when the iPad was still just a rumor — would now be worth over $17,500.

And now — as Apple prepares to kill the Cable TV industry in 2016 — it's going to happen again.

This is your opportunity to become one of the new "Apple Millionaires" — and secure your family's financial future with just a simple investment.

Within just a year's time, you could be entering retirement...or enjoying your new beachfront vacation home — all because you were in on Tim Cook's secret plan.

Thanks to Apple, the $193 Billion Cable Television Industry is Now on Its Death Bed

Now, I realize...people have been predicting the demise of cable television for years.

All the way back in 2011, a Forbes headline predicted, "The Death of Television."

"With the advent of wideband Internet access on the order of 24 megabits per second in many metropolitan areas, it might signal the death of television as we know it."

— Forbes, July 13, 2011

We now know that those earlier predictions were premature.

But we also know why: Apple hadn't entered the picture.

Because we're dealing with an industry filled with unhappy customers — and one constantly facing competition from advances in technology — it was only a matter of time before the industry would, in fact, be put out of its misery.

The only thing lacking was a real agent for change...a company ready to pounce on an opportunity to take advantage of an opportunity to convert millions of unhappy customers who have grown frustrated with rising prices...limited choices...and horrendous customer service.

Does this story sound familiar?

It should — it's exactly the blueprint Apple followed when they revolutionized the mobile phone industry with the release of their iPhone in 2007.

Here's another thing that should sound familiar:

Researchers Project the Cable TV Industry Could Quickly See $70 Billion per Year Disappear

You read that correctly.

According to research analysts, $70 billion per year could disappear — in the blink of an eye — with the type of change Apple will bring to the industry.

Just like the music industry saw its revenues slashed in half after the introduction of the iPod...the cable television industry will also see a massive revenue decline when Apple moves in.

And make no mistake — Apple is moving in.

With the imminent launch of Apple's new streaming television service...cable's monopoly on your television set will be all but over.

Here's what Apple CEO Tim Cook said recently about television:

"TV is one of those things that, if we're really honest, it's stuck back in the seventies...Think about how much your life has changed, and all the things around you that has changed. And yet TV, when you go in your living room to watch the TV...it almost feels like you're rewinding the clock and you've entered a time capsule and you're going backwards. The interface is terrible. I mean, it's awful!"

The thing is — he's absolutely right.

People not only hate the cable TV industry for the way its companies have treated them — "We'll be there between 9 a.m. and 7 p.m." — they also hate it because it forces you to pay hundreds of dollars per year for products you never intend to consume.

Think about it:

Why should you pay hundreds of dollars per year for shows and channels you not only don't watch...but you'd NEVER watch in a million years?

According to the Wall Street Journal, Discovery Channel charges cable systems $1.21 per subscriber — regardless of if the subscriber watches the channel or not.

Time Warner's TNT charges nearly $2 per subscriber...and ESPN charges a whopping $6 per subscriber!

If you're a sports fan but you've never watched a reality TV show in your life...why on earth should you be forced to pay for channels like MTV, which are filled with "reality" TV?

Or if you're a news junkie with no interest in sports, why should more than $6 of your monthly cable bill go toward paying for ESPN when you never watch it?

That would be like going to the grocery store and being forced to pay for the foods you plan to eat...as well as a cart filled with groceries that you'd NEVER eat!

It's just an outdated model...one that has outlived its usefulness.

Right now Apple is planning to blow the doors off that old, tired industry...

And in the process cause a massive disruption to the share prices of many major cable companies.

Big names like Comcast...Time Warner Cable...Cox Communications...and Verizon are about to take a huge revenue hit — and ultimately face the same fate as outdated companies like Tower Records, Research in Motion and Hewlett-Packard.

At the same time, a handful of companies — whose products and services will be critical to the success of Apple's new streaming TV service — stand poised to deliver life-altering profits to investors who get in early.

But time is of the essence here — as we get closer to the launch date for Apple's new streaming TV service, these companies may see a sharp spike in share price...meaning your window of opportunity could close.

How to Cash In on Tim Cook's Huge Secret: 3 Stocks Poised to Soar as Cable TV Crashes

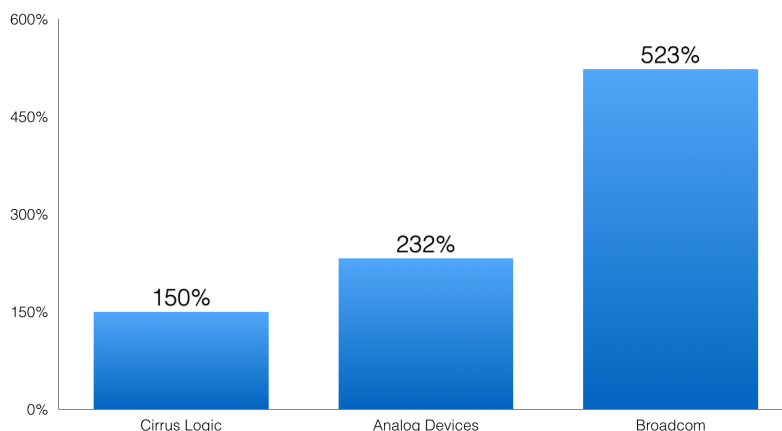

My name is William James — and as editor of the Insider Wealth Alert, it's my job to bring you the very "best of the best" when it comes to ideas for building wealth.

And that's what I have for you today — three companies poised to deliver potential triple-digit profits in the face of this massive change in the Cable TV industry.

With any massive disruption to a large industry, there is an enormous money-making opportunity for those investors who know where to look.

It happened with Cirrus Logic, which soared 150%...it happened with Analog Devices, Inc. which climbed 232%... it happened with Broadcom, which shot up 523% And — right now — it's happening again with three perfectly positioned companies.

I've just released a new research report complete with the ticker symbols and details for each of these three potentially explosive stocks.

These companies were hand-picked by Dennis Slothower — the award-winning market analyst who has helped investors make money by staying ahead of the curve time and time again.

This report, 3 Stocks Poised to Soar as Cable TV Crashes, is now available for immediate download — and I've arranged for you to receive a copy free of charge.

I'll tell you how you can claim your copy of this report in just a moment...but first I need to tell you...

How Apple Plans to Destroy the Cable TV Industry and Grab Billions of Dollars in Revenue

No question about it, cable's "bundling" policy — which forces you to pay steep prices for programming you'll never watch — is coming to an end...whether the cable companies like it or not.

And Apple's new streaming television service will put the final nail in this coffin.

According to the Wall Street Journal, "Apple's "skinny" bundle will have about 25 channels, a far cry from the 300-plus ones typically offered through cable systems. Broadcast networks owned by CBS, Walt Disney and 21st Century Fox will be among those."

Now, I have to tell you...I'm not the only one who sees this massive change coming.

CBS Chief Executive Leslie Moonves recently said,

“The floodgate is now open...clearly the bundle is changing.... The days of the 500-channel universe are over.”

CBS Chief Executive,
Leslie Moonves

The Los Angeles Times says,

“Apple remains one of the few companies in the world that has the potential to transform the TV industry, and we believe consumers are ready for a change.”

Los Angeles Times

Time Magazine says,

“We are edging closer to the end of cable as we know it.”

TIME

Business Insider says,

“Cable TV is dying... (with) ratings in a historic slump.”

BUSINESS INSIDER

And Robert Johnson — the founder of one of cable television’s most successful channels — was quoted as saying,

“Something’s got to give...At some point consumers are going to say, ‘Enough is enough.’”

BET★

Founder of BET,
Robert Johnson

Listen...Robert Johnson is one of the most successful businessmen in the United States — and he helped build cable television’s current model.

So if he sees the end coming for cable TV, you can be sure the rest of the industry sees this massive “sea change” coming as well...

But now that Apple is in the game...it’s too late for these slow-moving firms to save their outdated business model.

In fact, one research organization projects that Apple’s new streaming TV service will pick up more than 4 million U.S. subscribers in its first quarter on the market...grow to 7.4 million subscribers by the end of 2016...and 10.7 million by the end of 2018.

That would give Apple’s new service a revenue stream of more than $4 billion a year by the end of 2018 .

How You Can Profit From Cable TV’s Imminent Demise

I mentioned before...award-winning market analyst Dennis Slothower has hand-picked three companies — none of which are Apple — that are best positioned to deliver fast-moving gains to investors as this scenario unfolds.

We've seen this happen with companies like Broadcom — which soared 523% when Apple took out the music industry...

And with companies like Cirrus Logic — which delivered profits of more than 150% when Apple shook up the mobile phone industry...

And we've seen it happen with companies like Analog Devices, Inc — which skyrocketed 232% as Apple's iPad took out the personal computer industry.

Now, I can't tell you the names of the companies Dennis has hand-picked in this presentation — but you can learn the ticker symbols and all the relevant details when you claim your FREE report, 3 Stocks Poised to Soar as Cable TV Crashes.

You can download this report — immediately and with no obligation — by clicking on the button at the end of this message.

Just as it happened when Apple has killed off or revolutionized other industries — triple-digit profits are possible:

Company #1 is a video infrastructure company poised to dominate in this new era of content delivery. By helping content providers create, prepare and deliver programming the company has ensured that its technology will be in heavy demand....

Company #2 has been called a “must-have” for anyone who is considering turning off their cable box once and for all...and the company has been aggressively beefing up its lineup of exclusive content in recent months.

Company #3 is a company with multiple ways to profit as cable TV customers begin cutting the cord — including one revenue stream from hardware and another from their programming content.

Again...you can learn the names of these three stocks — and download your copy of 3 Stocks Poised to Soar as Cable TV Crashes immediately — by clicking on the button at the end of this message.

The research for this report was assembled by Dennis Slothower — the editor of an advisory service that was named “Letter of the Year” by Marketwatch.com.

When you claim your free report, you'll not only receive the names of the three stocks poised to soar in the months ahead, you'll also get the opportunity to...

Trade Alongside One of the World's Top Investment Advisors Every Day

Let me ask you a question — how much more money could you make if you had the ability to trade alongside one of the world's top investment advisors on a daily basis?

What market trends — such as the death of the $193 billion-a-year Cable TV industry — would you be able to spot ahead of the crowd?

And instead of simply gobbling up shares of expensive Apple stock...what stocks could you invest in to pounce on that opportunity that you might have otherwise never considered?

How much more money would you make on each trade than you're making right now – all because your daily mentor and trading partner tipped you off to a coming event that would impact the market in a huge way?
